ALLIES CHECK FURIOUS ATTACK OF INVADERS

While the Germans, following up their success in piercing the allies' line in Belgium, are pursuing a vigorous offensive movement, the Russians are sweeping ahead notably in the eastern field of war, according to Petrograd official reports.

The Russian War Office today announced that the German and Austrian invasion of Poland had been definitely checked, and that the Germans, using the Austrians to cover their retreat, had been driven back fifty miles from the Vistula. The Austrian War Office states that strong Russian reinforcements have been sent against the Austro-German armies in Galicia and southwestern Poland.

An Austrian cruiser has been sunk in the Kiao-Chau Bay by heavy Japanese artillery, according to a report from Pekin.

Up to October 21 the German armies in the eastern and western theatres of war had taken 296,869 prisoners, it was officially announced today in Berlin. These included 401 officers, of whom twenty-seven are generals.

Following up the advantage they gained by breaking through the Belgian line along the Yser in northwestern Belgium, and forcing a passage of that stream between Dixmude and Nieuport, the Germans have concentrated a series of vigorous attacks upon the allies in that region, according to today's Paris advices.

IMPORTANT GERMAN GAIN.

The trenches of the Belgians have been under continuous artillery fire since Saturday morning.

This is the first decided step gained by the Germans since they took the offensive against the allies in the northern sphere of operations. After tremendous difficulties the invaders succeeded in getting heavy artillery to the front and the bombardment of the defensive works from Menin, on the border, to Nieuport, on the North Sea, has been carried on with the utmost violence.

Despite their furious attacks, however, the Germans in northwestern Belgium have failed to make any further progress, according to today's official announcement by the French War Office. During Sunday the allies were able to maintain their frontal positions, the statement says.

A London Daily Mail dispatch from Flushing, describing the fighting in Belgium, says:

"The German losses are frightful. Three meadows near Ostend are heaped with dead. The wounded are now installed in private houses in Bruges, where large wooden sheds are being rushed up to receive additional injured. Thirty-seven farm wagons, containing a convulsive mass of wounded, dying and dead, passed in one hour near Middelkerke."

Day and night fighting is going on around Lille and Arras and farther north the Franco-British fleet is shelling the coast at

ORNAMENT STOPS A BULLET

Mildred Russell, fourteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alden Russell of No. 1 Gardner street, Cambridge, and a pupil in the Cambridge Latin School, was hit in the neck by a thirty-eight calibre bullet while on her way to Sunday school near Central square. Today the Cambridge police said the bullet had undoubtedly come from a cartridge exploded by the trolley tracks on Prospect street.

The girl's life was probably saved by her gold neck chain which deflected the bullet. The missile gashed her neck, causing a painful but not a serious wound.

The accident was the second of the kind in Cambridge within four months. Last Summer, while walking along Pearl street, Miss Almyra C. Frank of No. 54 Perry street, Cambridge, was injured in much the same manner.

Miss Russell was walking along Prospect street when she heard a report apparently from under the wheels of a passing street car. At the same life she felt a sting in her neck. Using a store window as a mirror, she saw the injury. At the First Baptist Church, where she attends Sunday school, the wound was treated. Afterwards Miss Russell went back along Prospect street and found an exploded 38-calibre shell. When she arrived home she found the bullet in the bosom of her dress.

"When I was looking at the wound in front of the store two young men came up and said to me: 'Well, you are not killed, anyway.'" Miss Russell told the police. The authorities started a search for the youths today in the belief that they can throw some light on the identity of the person who put the cartridge on the tracks.

The police found several shells of the same kind further along Prospect street.

Girl Killed by Elevator in Home on Bay State Road

Margaret Dowd, twenty-five, employed as a laundress in the home of Frank H. Thayer, shoe manufacturer, at No. 21 Bay State road, was instantly killed while operating an elevator in the home today.

The young woman had started upward from the basement. At the first floor it suddenly stopped, and servants investigating found the woman's head crushed between the flooring and the bottom of the elevator. The police thought the woman might have slipped and fallen.

The firemen of ladder 15 chopped away the woodwork and extricated the body, which was viewed later by Medical Examiner Richardson.

The young woman had been in the employ of the family for about a year. Nothing was known of her family or home address.

Major Hamilton, Old Indian Fighter, Dead

Major John Hamilton, Indian fighter under Custer, and veteran of the Civil War, died at his home in Salem today after a short illness. He enlisted in the army in 1856 and was retired ten years ago after being awarded two medals by Congress for bravery. He had comissions signed by Lincoln, Johnson, Hayes, Roosevelt and Taft.

DOUBT ON BERYL'S DEATH

Mrs. Richard H. Grogan, Jr., plans to leave Boston tonight for Buckeye, Tex., to make a handwriting test of the "suicide letter" purporting to have been written by her daughter, Beryl, before she died of poison.

"The letter has intensified my doubts, rather than satisfied them," the mother of the Cambridge "love duel" girl declared today. "I will bring the body back to Boston, even in the face of bullets."

Here is the full text of the letter as wired to Mrs. Grogan by County Attorney H. R. Lewis of Bay City, who is investigating the mystery of Beryl's death:

Buckeye, Texas, Box 22,
October 18, 1914.

My dear Mother:

Received your letter today and you probably have by now received the one which I wrote a few days ago explaining about this letter business. All letters to and from you are interfered with. That I know. In fact, the one which I got today was tampered with. That anyone with eyes could see.

I know that my husband didn't do it. I certainly do wish that you would make a complaint to Washington, as it might help considerable. We aren't the only ones missing mail, either.

All this letter affair has driven me to desperation. So am writing this letter in explanation of what I am going to do, also to clear my husband. Get me, Steve? That's old, isn't it? By the time you receive this I will be dead.

You have my love and I will never forget you or what you have done for me. Yes, you are right. A girl only has one mother and I do certainly appreciate it now more than ever I did before.

Try to think of me sometimes if you can. I will always think of you, mother.

Good-bye forever! With lots and lots of love I am, your own forever, BERYL.

MOTHER STILL DOUBTFUL.

In the opinion of the authorities in Texas this letter and another addressed to Rudolph Krouse, the plantation foreman, whom she claimed forced her under threats of death and violence to marry him on July 30, show Beryl's death to have been suicide.

But County Attorney Lewis admits in his latest telegrams that he is still not convinced of all the facts and today announced that he has resumed his investigation to determine whether there was any foul play. He has been inclined from the outset to look upon it as a case of self-destruction due to despair and conditions incompatible to a girl reared in ease and luxury in Boston. Yet there are features he wishes to prove further. The dead girl's mother and wealthy relatives in Boston still cling to the murder theory.

Mrs. Grogan said to the AMERICAN today:

"I was eager to get the wording of the letter. But I want to see the original and to study the handwriting. From that I will much. This is only one of many things I desire to look into when I arrive at Buckeye.

"I don't care what the authorities try to tell me or how many more suicide letters they produce, I still insist that my daughter did not take poison voluntarily. Why should she commit suicide within a few days of receiving a letter from me an-

$25,000 BAIL FOR PRISONER; MAY BE TRIED AGAIN

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—Mrs. Florence Conklin Carman was today released on $25,000 bail.

The woman whose trial for the murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey ended in a disagreement of the jury at Mineola was brought to Brooklyn in custody of Sheriff Pettit, and her application for bail was heard by Judge Kelby who presided at the trial.

She made the trip from Mineola by automobile. Dr. Edward Carman, her husband, did not come to Brooklyn, but remained at his home in Freeport.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY AGREES.

It was felt certain that she would secure bail as a result of the statement of District Attorney Smith in Brooklyn. He said:

"I see no reason why Mrs. Carman should not be released on $25,000 bail."

Dr. Carman had arranged for bail as high as $100,000 if it became necessary. Mrs. Carman's attorneys were at first anxious for $20,000 bail, but agreed to $25,000 after a short discussion with District Attorney Smith.

Mrs. Carman had completely recovered from her collapse of yesterday. She was smiling and cheerful when she left jail at Mineola. She passed a group of newspaper men, raised her veil and smiled in recognition of them.

"JURY PACT" SCANDAL.

District Attorney Smith spent the morning investigating the "jury pact" scandal, and was convinced that Mrs. Carman was not concerned in that. He said just before starting for the bail hearing:

"I am convinced that Mrs. Carman had nothing to do with the events which are reported to have taken place in the jury room."

On the question of her second trial, he had not made up his mind. "But I think she ought to be tried a second time," he said, "and I think she wants another trial."

The "jury pact" scandal today attracted even more discussion than the jury's disagreement. The scandal's origin was hard to trace, but the story as District Attorney Smith undertook to investigate it was this:

DISCORD IN JURY.

That there was discord in the jury as early as last Thursday, and that at the Garden City hotel Thursday night nine of the jurors declared they had agreed to vote for acquittal and to stock to that vote no matter what happened.

It was Jurors Aston and Hovey, who on the final vote, stood out for conviction. Since the jury was discharged, it has been learned that their meditations were marked by bitter anger, and also by violence.

Aston, in particular, was attacked by others of the jury, and one of those who wanted acquittal said, pointing to him:

"This man ought to be thrown out of the window."

"Then throw me out," Ashton ex-

COURT UPHOLDS LAW AGAINST THE RED FLAG

The constitutionality of the law which prohibits the carrying of a red flag in parades was upheld today in the decision of the full bench of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in the case of John Karnoven. Karnoven was arrested in Fitchburg in November, 1913, for carrying a red flag in a Socialist parade. He was found guilty in the Superior Court of Worcester County and the case went to the Supreme Court on the claim that the law was unconstitutional.

The case was closely watched by Socialists, who have desired a test since the law went into effect.

Chief Justice Rugg, in his report, declared that the statute included all flags, the dominating color of which was red, and quoted Webster's, the Century and other dictionaries as to the "revolutionary and terroristic associations historically, of the red flag, adding that the law "cannot be said to interfere unreasonably with the liberty of a citizen."

Asylum Attendant on Trial for Killing

Henry Lee, the Pierce Farm attendant who with Edmund Brandin was indicted for manslaughter as a result of the death of Charles H. Brown, a Pierce Farm patient, was put on trial today. The indictment against Brandin was not pressed. Miss Myrtelle A. Canavan, first witness, said she examined the body of Mr. Brown shortly after he died. She said: "I found four broken ribs on the right side and one on the left. Also there were bruises at the base of the throat."

LEONARD W. ROSS, an parliamentarian of Cemeteries, who put Pinanies Commissioner in the Ananias Club.

PUTS FINANCE COMMISSION IN ANANIAS CLUB

Leonard W. Ross ordered superintendent of the Mount Auburn cemetery department to put the Finance Commission in the Ananias Club, it was testified.

The commission in a statement to the public charged that Ross had padded the cemetery payrolls to the extent of $5000 a year.

Ross, however, explained that Mr. Ross had been hired entirely for the purpose of "Pete to the rescue."

"Mr. Ross told me," said Mr. Ross, "that he was hired by Mr. Ross to get rid of the Democratic laborers in the cemetery department and put Republicans in their places."

KIN OF 'DUEL GIRL' QUESTION SUICIDE LETTER

...Mrs. Carman, who said, "It is the most shocking thing I have ever heard. As the hours rolled on after I left the jury room I grew more and more nervous, and when the jury had been out for seven hours I was almost prostrated."

Mrs. Carman was in the sheriff's office when the jury announced it had agreed. She was accompanied by one of the jurymen that a verdict had been reached. Mrs. Carman was pale, and when she entered the jury room she had remained all through the trial.

Mrs. Carman looked up quickly and her face became deathly white when the foreman announced the verdict. She sank back in her chair and remained there for some minutes. Then she arose and walked out of the room.

"We were told the jury had been out seven hours," she said, "and I haven't heard about it, and I haven't heard about it."

She stepped back into Further Butler's chambers, and was overheard to remark that the report was incorrect. Then she left the building and entered a waiting automobile with her son and the accused woman started for home every point where the Germans are within range of the naval guns.

GERMANS ARE DRIVEN BACK FROM VISTULA

Along the western section of the centre the French and British have been making severe counter attacks to divert the attention of the Germans from the extreme north. Northwest of Soissons the British have gained a slight advantage.

Along the allies right an artillery duel is in progress, and it will probably be some time before it is decided. In the district east of the Meuse, between Etain and Toul, the infantry has been used for the purpose of holding the entrenchments in front during the past week, while the actual fighting has been carried on by hidden batteries off howitzers.

It is reported that the efforts of the German armies of the Crown Prince and the Grand Duke of Wurtemberg to join hands in the Argonne region have been frustrated by the skilful maneuvering of the French. The French have gained possession of the village of Melzicourt in the middle of the Argonne region. As long as this key position is held the German armies can be kept apart.

Considering the operations over the entire western theatre of hostilities, the successes seem about evenly divided in the great conflict which has been raging since September 12.

DESTROY GERMAN AEROPLANE.

The German are throwing up new entrenchments between Coq Sur Me and Wenduyne to protect the Bruges road.

General Gallieni's Paris headquarters has received word of the destruction of five German aeroplanes on Saturday; two were brought to earth near Rheims, two near Montdidier and one near Dunkirk.

The following telegram has been sent by the Russian Minister of Marine to the commander of the Russian Baltic fleet:

"The Czar charges me to express to you and the fleet his gratitude for the activity this Autumn season, in keeping to the sea despite the dangers of the mines and submarines.

"With skill and endurance the Baltic fleet has fulfilled the task of guarding the littoral and supporting the armies on land. Despite the enemy's numerical superiority he has obtained no definite successes. The Czar believes that God will bless with ultimate victory the Russian sailors who are struggling for the glory of their dear country."

A semi-official dispatch from Constantinople states that Germany has succeeded in transporting two submarines by rail to Turkey. They will be put into commission as soon as possible and be officered by Germans.

EYE WITNESS DESCRIBES HAVOC WROUGHT BY SHELLS AT DIXMUDE.

LONDON, Oct. 26.—The following description of fighting and the havoc wrought by shelling in northwestern Belgium has been telegraphed by the correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, who visited the Dixmude battlefield last Wednesday in company with a son of the Belgian War Minister, M. de Broqueville.

"No one could do justice to the grandeur and horror of the scene. As far as the eye could carry nothing could be seen but burning villages and smoking ruins.

"I realized for the first time how completely the motor has revolutionized warfare, and how every other factor is dominated by the presence or absence of this method of transportation. Every road to the front was packed with cars. They formed an ever-rolling, endless stream, going and returning. In every village hundreds of private cars were parked under the control of medical officers, waiting to carry the wounded to field hospitals.

BLOWN OUT OF DUGOUTS.

"Upon the firing line a terrible scene presented itself. The shell fire from the German batteries was so severe that the Belgian soldiers and French and British marines were literally blown out of their dugouts and sent scattering to cover.

"Along crowded roadways and across shell-torn fields rows of peasants, men, women and children, could be seen in flight. These unfortunates had to make their way the best they could to the rear and many of them were killed by bursting shells.

"Dixmude was the object of the German attack and shells were bursting all over the city. Houses were being ripped and torn and the streets were full of wreckage. Many buildings were in flames. At times wreckage was blown upward, falling like rain over a wide area. From a distance of three miles we could hear the German shells crashing in the streets of the town. Smoke rolled upward from the burning houses and the bursting shells.

Official War Reports.

FRENCH.

French Coat of Arms.

PARIS, Oct. 26.—During the day yesterday our front was maintained. The forces of the Germans that had succeeded in crossing the River Yser between Nieuport and Dixmude have not been able to make further progress.

Our front extends in a general way from Nieuport to Dixmude to the region between Ypres and Roulers, to the region of Armentieres and Lille, around La Bassee and of Lens, south of Arras. This line is prolonged to the south by that which has already been indicated in official communications.

In the battle of these latter days the enemy appears to have suffered considerable losses.

In Russia, to the west of the Vistula River and to the north of the Pilica, the Germans have been thrown back upon Inowlez, Skiernowice and Rawa, which have been taken at the point of the bayonet by the Russians. To the south of the Pilica, in the direction of Radom, a vigorous conflict has been in progress between the Russians and the Austro-Germans, who have lost many prisoners and guns.

To the south of Solec Russian troops have entered on the Vistula in a great corush, flinging the Austrians back upon the Sine, while to the south of Przemysl there have occurred stubborn conflicts favorable to the Russians. An Austrian column, debouching from the Carpathians upon Dolina, has been forced to the underbrush of the mountains.

RUSSIAN.

Russian Coat of Arms.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 26.—The German and Austrian invasion of Poland has been definitely checked. The German and Austrian advance on the Vistula and San rivers has been stopped.

The Germans have been driven back fifty miles from the Vistula and are being closely pursued by our troops.

It is believed that the Germans are falling back to the line of entrenching their well fortified, long prepared positions along the Warta River which are still fifty-three miles in their rear.

Everywhere the Russian troops have pursued the German after a battle they come in contact with Austrian troops, who are evidently being used by the Germans to cover their retreat.

In Galicia the Austrians have been defeated in their attempt to turn the Russian left flank. Austrians are only able to parry here and there the Russian onslaughts and continued their retreat.

Our troops are holding their positions all along the line and have taken a vigorous offensive, coming into contact with rear guards of the enemy and driving them back from the positions they attempted to hold.

AUSTRIAN.

Austrian Coat of Arms.

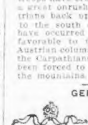
VIENNA, Oct. 26.—Austrian and German forces have been engaged in a protection in a nearly uninterrupted line from the northern spurs of the Carpathians by the way of Stary and Sambor, before the fortress of Przemysl, to the Polish part of the Vistula River and to the district of Pinsk. This force is opposing the main army of the Russians, which has been heavily reinforced by troops from the Caucasus, Siberia and Turkestan.

The Austrian offensive movement across the Carpathians attracted considerable forces.

In the middle of Galicia, where both armies are only fortified positions, the battle is stagnant. Northeast of Przemysl and on the lower San the Austrians have had several successes.

In Russian Poland strong forces are facing each other and since Saturday there has been fighting north of the Vistula between Ivangorod and Warsaw.

GERMAN.



BERLIN, Oct. 26.—Prisoners taken up to October 21 are classified as follows:

French—Officers, 1,472; privates, 146,357.

Russians—Officers, 2,161; privates, 104,524.

Belgians—Officers, 371; privates, 31,578.

English—Officers, 213; privates, 5,661.

Of the twenty-seven generals in German fortresses eighteen are Russian, six French and three Belgian.

SERVIAN.

NISH, Servia, Oct. 26.—During the recent fighting the whole Austrian army in Bosnia was repulsed with heavy losses. An Austrian monitor struck a mine near Skelassia, Ada and Sabac. A motor launch saved the crew.

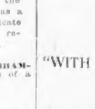
The Judgment Day of the Nations

"WITH RIGHTEOUSNESS SHALL HE JUDGE THE WORLD."

The Church's Judgment Day—The World's Judgment Day—Israel's Judgment Day—When and Why God "Winked" at Sin—"All His Ways Are Perfect"—The Harmonious Outcome.



St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 26.—Pastor Russell's sermon today was based on the text: "The times of this ignorance God winked at; but now . . . God hath appointed a Day in the which He will judge the world in righteousness by that Man whom He hath ordained."—Acts 17:30, 31.

The Judgment Day about to be ushered in, is a day of judgment, not of sentence. To have a well meaning man stabbed in the right ventricle of the heart, and to have a well meaning man stabbed in the right auricle of the heart, are both equally fatal to life, but the one is instantaneous death, while the other is a lingering death. So with the sins of the world—the sentence against Adam and his race, "Dying, thou shalt die," was pronounced at once, but the dying process has been going on for nearly six thousand years.

The Judgment Day is the time for the application of the remedy for sin. It is the time for the application of the Ransom, which Jesus gave for all. It is the time for the application of the Blood of Christ, which was shed for the sins of the whole world. It is the time for the application of the Healing Power, which God has provided through the Seed of Abraham, which is Christ, the Head, and the Church, which is His Body, for the blessing of all the families of the earth.

The Judgment Day is the time for the application of the Golden Rule, which is the principle of the Law of Love, which God has implanted in the hearts of His people, and which He has written in His Law, and which He has commanded shall be written in the hearts of all who shall be His people in the Millennial Age. The Golden Rule

NEW PROBE IN ROBBINS MYSTERY

WORCESTER, Oct. 26.—The investigation into the mysterious case of Mrs. Elisa Anna Robbins, who disappeared April 7, 1912, was reopened today following the identification of the body, just discovered in Lake Quinsigamond, by her husband, Edward P. Robbins, of North Grafton.

The medical examiner gave it as his opinion that death had been due to drowning, possibly suicidal. He was unable to determine whether the rope found around the woman's throat strangled her or not. The mystifying part of the case is that the body apparently had not been in the water more than six months, whereas her hat and pocketbook were found three days after she left home and near the spot where the body has just been discovered.

HUSBAND PUZZLED.

Search covering practically all of the State failed to reveal the slightest trace of Mrs. Robbins. Her husband could imagine no reason why she should want to do away with herself. She had no known enemies, and the plentifully supplied pocketbook refuted the theory she had been murdered by a would-be robber.

When she left her home it had been with the expressed intention of visiting her father, George Thompson, in Worcester, who had a country place in North Grafton not far from where her belongings were picked up.

Mrs. Robbins, however, did not go to her father's house, as far as any one could learn, and none of her friends could remember having seen her at any time on or after April 7, 1912.

Mr. Robbins is confident of the identification. He said the sets of false teeth the victim had were like his wife's. Also he said the clothing was hers. He claimed the body and will bury it today.

MYSTIFIED BY CORD.

Around the neck, outside the collar, was a piece of cord which had been wound round, loosely, several times and then knotted.

To this there was a slack end about eight feet long, which had been fashioned into a noose, and in this noose it was evident that at some time a heavy rock or weight of some sort had been placed. The rope was not broken, nor cut, but showed traces of having been worn by the action of the waters and the sandy bottom of the lake.

This rope had been so loosely adjusted that despite the fact it had been there for some time it had made no mark on the woman's throat.

Two Brilliant Sunday Concerts at Boston Theatre

Two brilliant concerts were given at the Boston Theatre yesterday. In the afternoon the big house was filled with friends of the Boston Music School Settlement. The artists were Maud Powell and Felix Fox.

Miss Powell is almost without rival as a woman violinist and her playing awakened enthusiasm. Felix Fox, the pianist, was heard in solo numbers and in concerted playing with Miss Powell. He played with the wonderful technical grasp for which he is famous.

In the evening the Boston Theatre company gave a concert of operatic selections. The singers were Blanche Hamilton Fox, Helen Josephe, a Boston girl who is making her operatic debut; Pleco, the baritone, and Operzo, the tenor. George Anderson, pianist, played several selection.

Miss Fox was in splendid voice and really wonderful in the aria from "Mignon." Operzo sang as an encore after an air from Andre Chenier, the lament of Johnson from "The Girl of the Golden West."

MYSTERY OVER WOMAN WHO SOUGHT DEATH

Do you know "Alice Dugan" (or Duncan?)

If so you may be able to help the police solve the mystery of the identity of the woman who tried to kill herself at the South Station and who is now recovering at the City Hospital.

The only name the woman has mentioned is "Alice Dugan." The last name was not distinctly spoken, and the doctors think it may be Duncan. Other than this, the woman has been as silent as the Sphinx, absolutely refusing to talk about herself, her relatives, her home or to explain why she attempted suicide by cutting her throat with a razor.

The police say the woman is apparently refined. This is their description of her:

Age sixty-eight.
Height 5 feet 3 inches.
Weight 130 pounds.
Complexion light.
Hair gray.
Eyes blue.
Clothing, Oxford gray coat, white knitted shawl with a blue border, black hat with three ostrich plumes, white shirtwaist, black skirt, black shoes and stockings.
Teeth, no upper teeth; false lower teeth.
Jewelry, gold band ring on third finger on left hand. She wore gold-rim spectacles.

Dr. Frank H. Holt, assistant superintendent of City Hospital, has tried again and again to secure information from the woman, but in vain.

DORCHESTER IS EAGER FOR NEW CITY MARKET

Dorchester residents are hailing with joy the proposed municipal market in that district, and the women are using all their influence to bring about a speedy opening of the market in a section where it will do the most good.

Mrs. Arthur H. Merritt, president of the Dorchester Women's Club, said:

"Dorchester was a municipal market and, of course, is going to have it. The best place for it is between Fields Corner and Savin Hill avenue, and if it was placed on Columbia corner it would be at the best point of all. It is really the most suitable, as there is so much land there. It is within easy reach of the poor people in the district.

"Municipal markets are fine. I saw them abroad and they met with huge success."

Mrs. Frank L. Young of Ashmont street, Dorchester, a prominent clubwoman, said:

"I believe in municipal markets. They should be placed where they will do the most people the most good. There should be men in charge to see that the dealers don't buy all the stock from the farmers and then resell it at a profit. The market will be a good thing for Dorchester."

AMATEUR PIN BOWLERS OPEN THEIR SEASON

Bowling League Matches Tonight

AMATEUR BOSTON PINS—A. O. U. M. at Dudley (Colonial at 0. A. A.); W. L. C. at C. P. A.

I. O. O. F.—Five matches at the Adams Square alleys.

LOUIS CHAR—Four matches at the Arch Street alleys.

CITY HALL—Four matches at the New Boston alleys.

N. Y., N. H. & H.—At the Summer Street alleys.

CORPORATION.—Four matches at Little field's alleys.

HOOD RUBBER—At the Red Dragon alleys.

HOLNS—At the Corruth alleys.

FIELD & FLINT LADIES—At Little field's alleys.

CORNER STONE—Four matches at the Brunswick alleys.

SIX of the eight teams in the Amateur Boston Pin League will start the ball rolling tonight at the various alleys of the organization. The other two will join in the race tomorrow evening.

While there is no match of particular interest, it is quite probable that many of the followers in the league will journey out to the Cottage Park Yacht Club alleys to see how the home club stacks up against Winthrop Cottage Park, as one of the two new clubs admitted to the league when Dalton and Newtowne dropped out.

Colonial Club of Dorchester will send a quintet to the B. A. A. to meet the wearers of the Unicorn. The other match will bring together the Arlington Boat Club and Dudley at the latter lanes.

* * *

THE crack tandem team of Paul Poehler and Archie Walsh will start today on a four days' tour of Maine in conjunction with the opening of the new state league. During the trip they will meet the leading candlepin cracks of the Pine Tree State. Tonight they will be in Lewiston, tomorrow at Gardner, Wednesday at Augusta and Thursday at Waterville.

IT is surprising to note the rapid advance the bowling game has made in Somerville in the short time—well within the past five years—when there were but five or six alleys in the whole city. The east section did not have one first-class lane. Now the alleys are doing a remarkable style. There are at least a dozen alleys in operation, and the next step in the advancement of the game was the organization of the City League, with eight teams. George H. Gorin, George McConville, Harvey Hinton, Joe Spillane, Tom Cummings, Broderick, H. A. Gillette, P. J. Dwyer and Anthony Campilla were the prime movers in the quite successful and the popular Winter pastime in Somerville.

* * *

PYTHIANS in particular and bowling generally in the general will gather at the Summer Street alleys tomorrow night to witness the match between Marathon and Washington of the Suburban K. of P. League. These two teams lead the league at present, and on the outcome of this match depends which shall be rated as the best quintet.

WASHINGTON has a clean slate to date, having won twelve straight points without a defeat, while Marathon has won ten and lost only two. Both teams are rolling in great style and are very evenly matched, having practically the same average.

* * *

THE Inman Cigar League will begin operations at the Arch Street alleys this evening. Eight teams, bearing the nom de plumes of various big league baseball teams, will face the firing line.

CONSIDERABLE interest is being displayed in the match between Everett and Suffolk of the I. O. O. F. League at the Adams Square alleys tonight. Everett is piling up a big lead, having lost but one point in twelve, and consequently something them could not have been assigned to a better team than Suffolk, for the relief of many followers of the league.

A PROSPEROUS night has put Warren Brown of the Boylston team in a position to challenge Hinton and Walsh for the individual lead in the City League. Brown boasts of an average of 250.

* * *

AMBROSE of the Newton quintet has picked his way to the front in the Newton boulevard series, beating George Hersey. Hersey is also by Hunt of Newton.

* * *

ANY doubt in the minds of the Interstate League boomers of Joe Pilotti batting for the Lowell team was dispelled when the crack incatcher took the lead away from Horne with a season's average of .350.

* * *

THE present race in the K. of C. League promises to rival the great battle of last year for the first two matches, three teams—Dudley, Dorchester and Fore Marquette—are bound up in the first place. Niles and Keefe are setting the pace for the individuals, with averages of 118 and 103, respectively.

* * *

ELM HILL tops the Columbus Club League with a clean slate of eight points won.

GEORGE MCONVILLE'S Rangers are decidedly the under berth in the Somerville City League.

WELSH WON TITLE ON A VEGETARIAN DIET

By RINGSIDE.

Freddy Welsh, the world's lightweight champion, who will meet Matty Baldwin in a twelve-round bout at the Atlas A. A. tomorrow night, is a vegetarian. This news will be quite a shock to those persons who believe that one cannot succeed in athletics unless he is a meat eater.

Welsh is classed as one of the greatest boxers in the history of the ring, but has managed to win success without consuming any thick, juicy steaks or choice lamb chops.

The average boxer would lead a miserable career if he was not permitted to eat meat. He would claim that the vitality would be impaired, and that he would enter the ring as weak as a kitten.

The majority of boxers always eat a big steak five or six hours before they enter a ring. This they claim, enables them to keep fighting at a merry clip from the time the bell sounds in the opening of the first session until the contest comes to an end.

BEST IN LONG BOUTS.

But yet Welsh has managed to win a world's championship on a vegetarian diet. The strange thing about the Englishman's record is that the longer his bouts are the better he seems to perform. He has won most his fame in twenty-round tussles, which require all the strength and endurance which a boxer possesses. Unless sporting men are all humorous, little story about Welsh concerning his vegetarian system of eating. The incident occured at the Avonia hotel in New York a few years ago. The Welsh ball is one of the chief sporting event of the year in New York, and is patronized by almost all of the boxers and other sporting celebrities who are in New York at the time.

Welsh attended the affair with a party of friends and late in the evening entered a light lunch and seated at a table with his friends, when Matty Baldwin, who was then a featherweight, and Jack Britton noticed that Welsh was eating a frankfort which was served on a small dish. Upon which the Chelsea boy had pastimed over a Coney Beach.

"I thought you were a vegetarian," says Matty, as he greeted Welsh.

"So I am, but what do you mean by eating a frankfurt?" responded Baldwin.

"Why a frankfurt does not contain any meat, only bread," said Britton.

This was too much for Baldwin and Britton, and in the ball room where the dinners were doing one of the latest trots.

EATS A LITTLE CHICKEN.

Welsh, however, admits that he occasionally eats a little meat. But he says that he restricts himself to a small chicken sandwich after a hard battle. He is, he plain, every inch a vegetarian the rest of the time.

Welsh attributes his long career in the ring to the light lunch he has exercised in ordering his food. He claims that most athletes eat too much and that many of their downfall years before they should be placed in discard.

The Welshman is a great lover of sports. He keeps a supply of them at his training camp and asserts that they contain much nourishment. The Welshman has shortened another old ring precedent. It is that of drinking large bottles of ale after a hard bout. Most trainers declare that this causes stiffness and is what every lightweight must avoid.

Welsh, however, drinks a quart of ale, water when he completes his road work and trainine stunts in the morning. And it does not seem to make him heavy.

Gilbert Ballard, the little Chelsea lightweight, who has his ideas of what is good for a boxer. When he has a bout on hand he consumes a supply of tonic, moule and ice cream. Because of that it makes him feel like a new man.

Matty Baldwin does not follow any stated diet when he is preparing for important battles. He eats good, substantial food, and claims that one is what gives him such great strength. Therefore, it is obvious that entirely different systems will succeed.

Mike Ryan, the Marathon runner, once told the writer that he ate whatever he liked when he felt hungry, and that he never suffered any harm from doing so. Then there is Jimmy Duffy, who finished first in the big B. A. A. grind last Spring, who asserted that he trained on beer and cigarettes, if the average runner followed Duffy's schedule, it would be forced into retirement in a short time.

WELSH RULES FAVORITE.

Whether or not a vegetarian can defeat a meat eater will be tested when Welsh and Baldwin clash. The contest has aroused a tremendous amount of interest and is expected to be witnessed by a record breaking crowd of fans.

Welsh naturally rules a favorite in the betting, as the lightweight title is at stake, and Baldwin is a clever boxing division. And in our humble opinion they are right.

Welsh, however, will not have things all his own way. Matty Baldwin is one of the best fighters that represents any man's town and unless all the "dope" goes wrong he will make things mighty interesting for friend Welsh. He is certain to carry the Briton along at a lively clip every minute that the two men are in the ring.

We wish to go on record as stating that the bout will go the limit of twelve rounds. Welsh is too clever a boxer to be stopped by Baldwin in a twelve-round skirmish, while the champion does not carry enough stage guns to make the Charlestown boy give ground.

Matty is confident that he will give a good account of himself. He expects to grab off the decision but he says that he will get a draw at least.

Billy Roche of New York, who won fame while refereeing boxing bouts in California, will act as the third man in the ring.

"Young" Donahue, the former Roxbury lightweight, and Jerry Moore of the West End will referee the preliminary bouts. Jack Sheehan, Martin Flaherty and Dick Flemming, the three regular club referees, are still in training and declare that they will not act as officials in a Boston ring until the ban is put on outside officials.

DONAHUE FOUGHT WELSH.

Donahue will closely follow every move of Welsh. It will be interesting when these two men meet as they boxed a great ten-round draw in New Orleans back in March, 1909. Donahue was then at his best and had few equals while it came to ring skill and a thorough knowledge of ring craft.

George Robinson of Cambridge and Dan McDonald, who hails from Nova Scotia, will exchange blows in the semi-final bouts of eight rounds. There will be the usual preliminary bouts.

INDOOR BIKE TITLE RACES ON THIS WEEK

Seven days of racing are on the cards for the bike fans at the Boston Arena, starting with the 1-hour sprint and motor-paced championships on Saturday night, and continuing through the following week with the annual six-day race, which begins next Sunday.

The field in the motor-paced championship is exactly the same, with one exception, as the one which competed for the outdoor title at Revere last Summer.

Clarence Carman, national middle-distance champion, George Wiley, exchampion, Worth Mitten and Bobby Walthour will meet in the race.

The race will be decided in two five-mile heats and a ten-mile final, the winner of each of the preliminary heats will clash in the final.

Another well-liked component of Alfred Goullet, the Australian star, Teddy Hill of Watertown, Ed. Lawrence and Ivor Lawson will take the gun in the sprint championship, which will be decided in the best five heats of a mile each.

Many of the best riders in the world, making 20 twelve teams, will clash for the honors in the six-day grind, which will include the following riders:

Goullet and Hill, Moran and McNamara, Hein and Thomas, Lawson and Drobach, Lawrence and Schinkel, Carman and Root-Russe, Mitten and Anderson and Kopsky and Hansen, Cameron, Walthour, Eddie Root, Patsy Logan and four other men who have not yet been named, will also compete.

Work on the track at the Arena will begin immediately after the race tomorrow night. The square will be built under the personal supervision of Managers McLean and Butler.

Federal Head Denies Trip Here After Stars

Ed W. Harter, business manager of the Indianapolis Federal League Baseball Club, which won the pennant in that organization, is spending a few days in this city.

There was a rumor that the purpose of his visit is to sign up some of the Braves and Red Sox, but he wished to have this rumor emphatically denied.

He said he has no intention of going after any man in organized baseball. If he had he would not find many of the players in Boston at this season.

Mr. Harter is on his way to Bangor, Me., where he will join Cy Falkenberg. Earl Moseley and several other Indianapolis stars on a hunting trip. He hopes to be able to pay a visit to James E. Gaffney of the Boston National League Club before his return to the West.

KENNEBUNK, Me., Oct. 26.—John W. Coombs, of the Philadelphia Americans, is entertaining a number of friends in a unique manner for the next three weeks.

Mr. Coombs, and Robert Shawkey, Daniel Murphy and Mr. and Mrs. John Lapp left Portland Saturday morning for Greenville on Lake Moosehead, twelve miles Northeast Carry, where they will take canoes and paddle down the Allagash River with three guides. They will stop at Fort Kent and return by rail.

Mr. Coombs left the party at Portland and will be the guest of Mrs. Coombs and other relatives' absence. Mr. Coombs is familiar with the country to be crossed and promises his friends moose meat in plenty.

Cornell Men Hope to Land Big Games

ITHACA, Oct. 26.—While the Cornell football team which returned here from New York was warmly congratulated for its victory over Penn, the coaches found food for thought in their deliberations over the success of the Brownians with the Red and Blue, in the last period of the game.

The Cornell players were all in good shape with the exception of Kleiber, who suffered a blow in the shoulder. It is hoped that he will be sustained a broken bone.

The general feeling about the team at Cornell now is that the Ithacans will meet a good chance to win in the big games.

Accident Stops Race.

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—The second heat of the series to decide the American motor beat championship was again postponed when the Black Demon III. blew out a cylinder head while warming up before the race. The Disturber IV. and the Billikin will meet the Black Demon III. tomorrow.

Brickley, Home from Hospital, Welcomed Back to College

There was open house in one homestead over Everett way today, for yesterday Charley Brickley was discharged from the Stillman Infirmary.

Friends of the greatest football player in the history of the world assembled in the Brickley manor to welcome the finest and most popular athlete that ever set foot on a collegiate athletic field.

Brickley came through in fine shape and is now thinking of getting back on the Harvard firing lines.

"You've got to show me," Dr. Nicholas declares, while Charley's mother vows that if he ever steps foot on the gridiron this Fall she will take him over her knee and give him a real old-fashioned childhood spanking.

Louis Wenz Elected Captain at Colby

WATERVILLE, Me., Oct. 26.—Louis Ezra Wenz of Roselle, New Jersey, was chosen captain of the Colby College cross-country team.

Wenz is a sophomore and came to Colby last year as the leader of Coach Harvey Cohn's New York string of runners. He took second in the Maine intercollegiate cross country run last year, and second in the two-mile run of the Maine intercollegiate track meet.

Bill James Winner in All-Stars' Game

SPOKANE, Wash., Oct. 26.—Bill James of World's Series fame was invincible after the first inning and the All-Star Nationals defeated the All-Americans, 11 to 5. In the first inning the Americans scored three unearned runs.

CAMP SEES ECLIPSE OF FORMER COLLEGE FOOTBALL CHAMPIONS

Written for the Boston American.

By WALTER CAMP.

Saturday's games once more produced a kaleidoscopic rearrangement of the football map. Yale, a team which had not failed to score at least twenty points in every game and a week ago twenty-eight against a supposedly strong team like Notre Dame, found Washington and Jefferson their masters and went down to defeat.

Michigan, who had been so tremblingly on the brink of disaster, found it in full force when they met Syracuse and succumbed ignominiously.

Cornell, after two defeats, had a week ago begun to show signs of coming and simply romped over the green men of Brown.

SUB SAVED DAY FOR HARVARD.

Princeton, profiting by Dartmouth's poor generalship to acquire a commanding lead of 16 to 6, then seemed to lose all their fire, and for the last five minutes, with the score 12 to 16 with Dartmouth, through three hurling successful forward passes, were pressing for the final call of time.

Tufts, after having frightened Harvard nearly out of their wits a week ago, could do no better than to lose to Rutgers, 16 to 7, while Penn added itself to the list of the teams which this year are taking revenge upon the once formidable Carlisle Indians.

Harvard, with their hearts still in their throats from two successive scares, were through nearly the entire game with Penn State ahead, only to succeed in tying at the very end by a brilliant run of a substitute, Wilcox.

The Army and Colgate both did well, and the Navy had a walkover. Williams toned out Trinity in a scoring game, and Amherst took Wesleyan's measure with ease.

HOW WESTERN GAMES RESULTED

In the West Notre Dame smothered South Dakota, Minnesota was lucky to get a single score win from Iowa, Nebraska showed up far better against the Michigan Aggies than did Michigan against these same Aggies a week ago, which makes Michigan's chances against Harvard look still more doubtful.

Chicago swamped Purdue, and Illinois did the same to Northwestern. Altogether one does not hear the so-called big teams talking very much these days about "minor" teams on their schedules.

Last week I said there were no longer any minor teams, or rather none that the big fellows could be sure were really minor ones, and the week has proven this doubly true.

So far the Western invasion has proven weak, indeed, and there is only left the Michigan-Harvard test next Saturday. Moreover, Yost's material has been badly shot to pieces, and while Harvard has suffered in this line, too, the latter institution has a lot more to draw upon and is pretty sure to have two at least out of the good backfield men ready for the lineup in the game if necessary.

NEW PLAYS HAVE BEEN SOLVED.

So, with all these new shifts and angles, what has been the week's story? How has each of the styles of iron go?

It is simply true that the attacks that have been exposed since the beginning of the season are now being analyzed and in a measure more successfully solved by the defence.

On the other hand, the new recent developments are still too new for the defence to quite grasp. And there will be others, too.

The Tufts attack with the split line took Harvard by surprise, the lateral passing of Yale threw Notre Dame into the air, but neither of these two was mystifying after the students of defence had had time to study over them.

It takes a wonderfully clever team, no eleven in fact, that few of them have ever trod the gridiron, to successfully solve a new principal of attack while the play is going on, but give them a week of experimentation upon it, its value is lessened 50 per cent.

GRICE WORKED TEAM TOO HARD.

Another lesson that is likely to be driven home hard by the results of another week's progress is that the modern style of play takes a lot of generalship, and that first-class quarterbacks are just as rare as ever, and, in fact, that the real combination of player and general has not been successfully grown by any of them up to this point of the season.

Otto of Dartmouth is a wonderful player, but he butchered his team in the first period at Princeton. Ames of Princeton used good judgment, but made an almost fatal muff at a critical time. His physique is frail to stand quarterback plunging.

On the whole, if one is to judge by the scores only, and the character of the contests, Princeton is emerging from the October haze as a strong eleven.

They have thus far not failed to do their job, and toward the end of the Dartmouth game they uncovered a very pretty piece of open field work with an excellent outlet for a forward pass after a double handling of the ball.

BIG GAMES STILL TO COME.

Driggs' punting was distinctly good and the line work of Hallin and Shenk on defence admirable. In fact, the Princeton line, until it was tired, showed the fastest charge thus far exhibited this season.

But they tired much toward the end and the backfield was a sieve for forward passes. Of their attack it is still difficult to speak decisively, for it was not necessary to use it, as they had the game won through Dartmouth's poor generalship before they were obliged to face anything critical.

So there we must await for the test. It is safe to say that unless the Yale line can stop the Princeton forwards their lateral passing cannot work successfully.

Yet Princeton looked a very weak team for a time during the fourth period against Dartmouth.

Thus we are seeing the passing out of the supremacy of the old holders and the coming to the front of many of the presumed or assumed lesser lights of the gridiron, and the first of November will find the most complicated football situation ever witnessed.

Johnson Unsigned for Next Season

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24. — Walter Johnson is at his home in Kansas, where he will remain until time for the Spring ensemble to leave for the training camp.

Move to Drop Plunge from Water Sports

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—Two new events have been added to the program of events for the swimming championships by a vote of the delegates to the Intercollegiate Swimming Association meeting.

A fifty-yard breast stroke and a back stroke for the same distance will be tried out this year in the individual championships.

If the breast stroke and back stroke swims are productive of keen competition, it is the plan of the association to adopt them in place of the plunge for distance event in all of the dual meets.

There is a well defined move to eliminate the plunge, and the substitution of these swims is the first step in this direction.

The second was taken at the meeting by cutting down the number of dives in the plunge from three to two for distance.

The two swims are on the program of the Olympic championships, while the plunge is gradually being dropped throughout the country.

Disadvantage of the plunge, the delegates maintained, is the length of time necessary to run off the event.

An effort was made by the Yale and Princeton delegates to pass a ruling that no freshman might compete on a college team without being in college at least two months.

The proposal was voted down by Pennsylvania, Columbia and C. C. N. Y., all of which college have freshmen enter the universities in February and do not have a one-year rule, such as prevails at the other two colleges.

Yelle Starts Work for Lustig Bout

Freddy Yelle, the rugged Taunton lightweight, today started training for his twelve-round bout with Johnny "Young" Lustig of New York, which will be decided before the Lakeside A. C. in Worcester next Monday night. Yelle expects to win from Lustig. He says that if he triumphs over the Gotham glove wielder, he will again start on the trail of Matty Baldi, the New England lightweight champion.

Johnson and Willard Reported Signed Up

LEXINGTON, Ky., Oct. 26.—Jack Curley, New York promoter, declares that he has signed Jack Johnson and Jess Willard for a $10,000 purse in a world's championship battle. Curley said the fight would take place in Juarez, Mexico; Havana, or somewhere in Australia at a time to be announced later. Curley says a personal ally he is sure that Willard can beat Johnson.

High School Boy Army Squad Star

ANNAPOLIS, Oct. 26.—Blodgett, a big youth, who made some reputation as an athlete at New York High School of Commerce, is playing in better form than ever at the Academy, and is rounding into the most valuable of the backfield backs. Wessel is another player who will be given attention during the coming week.

Woonsockets Beat Connolly's Nine

MANVILLE, R. I., Oct. 26.—Six thousand Rhode Island baseball fans saw the Connolly's star nine defeated here by the Woonsocket Nationals, 7 to 6. Connolly, who is a local boy and who spends his Winters on his father's farm, on the outskirts of this village, did the twirling. Local fans will tender him a banquet here Friday night.

STALLINGS TO MAKE DEBUT ON STAGE TONIGHT

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—George T. Stallings, late of Boston, Mass., and later than that of Haddock, Jones County, Ga., makes his debut in vaudeville tonight. The scene of this event will be the Palace Theatre, and a large and aristocratic audience will be present. We know it will be large because Harry Sparrow has promised to attend, and it is certain to be aristocratic in view of the fact that the New York Chapter of the Baseball Writers' Assassination of America will assemble en masse.

It is understood that Mr. Stallings will deliver a monologue, and if it is anything like the monologue he ordinarily delivers on the bench of the Braves, it should thrill the audience from keel to topmasts. It is rumored that a large flock of Boston people, including Mayor Curley and perhaps ex-Mayor "Honey Fitz," are coming over to the debut.

There will be some ceremony incident to Mr. Stallings' coming out. Bozeman Bulger, representing the Baseball Writers' Assassination aforesaid, has been chartered by the Palace for this special occasion, and is likely to make a speech, and, of course, there will be a presentation to Mr. Stallings of the loving cup. "How dear to my heart are the scenes of the Palace

When a chicken from Kingsley presents them to view.
The guys on the stage, and the gang in the boxes,
And the old low-ing cup, with the handle askew."
CHORUS.
"Oh, that old silver vess-el, that moss covered tachard,
That old low-ing cup that's dispensed to the boy-boys."

Yale's Squad Takes Long Ret at Marion

NEW HAVEN, Ct., Oct. 26.—Most of the members of the Yale football team are recuperating from Saturday's strenuous game with Washington and Jefferson at Marion.

Immediately after the game the players boarded Captain Horry Conway's steam yacht Parthenia and enjoyed an all night sail up the sound.

Blackinthan, left end, sprained his ankle in the game and will not be able to play for ten days. Quarterback Wilson again injured his knee. Quite a few of the players, including Captain Talbott, are overtrained, which fact is causing the trainers considerable worry. Practice during the week will probably be light.

Johanson-Perelli in Mat Bout Here

John Perelli, the Italian whirlwind, and Einer Johanson, the crack Norwegian, meet at the Grand Opera House on Thursday night, in the weekly mat bout, instead of Checker-Jack Butler and Peter Goulette.

The change was made because Goulette asked for more time in which to get to weight.

Johanson has appeared here several times, his best performance being with Pat Connolly in Mechanics building last Winter.

Johanson is an ideal opponent for the Italian, and it would not surprise those knowing ones to see Perelli downed clean and hard.

EXPERTS ON FOOTBALL HAVE GRIDIRON PUZZLE

By "AL."

Some few hundred sundry football experts are asking themselves today just what is the matter with the gridiron game this season. And after Saturday's upsets it's not a bit surprising that the critics of the gridiron sport are in the air, not the least bit.

The season has been one of surprises from the very beginning, but "what happened Saturday capped the climax. All the big teams in the East—that is the so-called big teams—have been either tied or defeated except Princeton. And the Tigers did not look any too good in the last few minutes of that Dartmouth game.

The downfall of Yale before Washington and Jefferson was the big surprise of the day, but the way Penn State treated Harvard, even though the Crimson team was more or less a second-string aggregation, is not far behind in the surprise list.

To a man up a tree, it would appear that the teams that have real champion material are sort of between the devil and the deep sea as regards the use of the new open game and a reliance on the old, straight system. Practically all coaches have swung around to the new methods, but in most cases playing shows that the men themselves have not been fully accustomed to the change they are up against.

EASY FOR BIG TEAMS.

This week will give the "big" teams sort of a layoff, as none of them, from present appearance is up against extra strong competition. But then, it must be remembered that appearances haven't counted for much in football this season.

What a short time back was looked on as a big game—the clash between Michigan and Harvard — now looms ahead as merely a practice jaunt for the Crimson team. The way Syracuse smeared up the Westerners was a caution and if Yost can get his team round into form to make any kind of a showing against the Harvard outfit, he will be a sure enough candidate for brackets with Miracle Man Stallings of pay or less baseball fame.

The Western attacks on the East have this season been dismal failures and, as we have said, the "big" clash Saturday promises to stay in the same class.

To make matters worse for the Wolverine crew, several of the Harvard regulars who have been out of the game for a couple of weeks will be shot back Saturday. "Tracks" Hardwick expected to go in against Penn State, but was held in reserve. The same applies to Captain Trumbull and Logan, while Mahan will be on the job if necessary in a few days. Peacock, too, is showing speed in fine proving and may be worked a bit during the week, though it is doubtful if coach Haughton will be willing to take chances so soon on his injured star lineman.

Soucy is likely to have a lot of rest before he comes back to the squad, for his knee received a very severe wrenching in the game Saturday. This injury is as serious as any of the lesser troubles that have beset the Crimson outfit this season. The converted centre was just beginning to pick up the finesse of the end position and now a layoff will make his tuition all over again necessary when he gets out once more.

Harvard this week will get right down to the serious business of getting the regulars accustomed to playing together. We can now look to see the constant shift program of the last fortnight come to an end. All the players have been tried out thoroughly and Haughton and the rest of the coaches have sufficient idea of the ability of the different individuals to pin their hopes on one regular eleven. Of course there will have to be several second string men worked in until all the regulars get back on the field.

Yale, with the gloom that the unexpected defeat Saturday caused, seems to have the hardest job of any of the leading eleven for the present week. The Elis meet Colgate, a team that has been somew'at unherald of this season, but has been playing smashing, fast football right along. The manner in which the New Yorkers crushed Vermont Saturday is proof sufficient that they have a football team of some sort.

YALE COACHES BUSY.

The Yale squad is due for some very vigorous practice, with a swarm of coaches on the job to help out Silent Frank Hinkey. After the way the lateral pass baffled the supposedly strong Notre Dame eleven, the play was accepted far and wide as the real secret of the open game.

Hoppe Beat Inman in 4-Day Cue Play

MONTREAL, Oct. 26.—Willie Hoppe, American champion billiard player, easily defeated Melbourne Inman, English champion, in the four days' play at mixed styles, by a score of 2,565 to 2,509. Play is resumed today at Toronto and the final games will be contested in Winnipeg.

Gilmore Has a Few Jolts to Hand Out

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—Although there was a revival here of the rumor that Roger Bresnahan of the Chicago National League club had signed a contract as manager of the Brooklyn Federals, no one could be found to verify it.

President Gilmore, Charles Weeghman and other prominent officials of the Federal League left here for the West, but none of them would substantiate the report of Bresnahan's coming to Brooklyn.

Bresnahan has not been seen in Greater New York recently, but he may have met the Brooklyn club owners in some other city.

Just before he stepped on the train for Chicago President Gilmore said:

"Within a month I will hand some jolts to Governor Tener, Ban Johnson and Garry Herrmann, as I have at least four big surprises in store for them, and the baseball public will hear of them before as many weeks have rolled by.

"The Pericon," the Latest Dancing Novelty

It's very Simple as Maurice and Florence Walton Explain It. Both Have Been Teaching It to European Royalty

Here are the dancers in the first position, ready to start the four steps in "The Pericon."

One of the striking positions in "The Waltz Eccentrique," as danced by Maurice and Florence Walton before some of the crowned heads of Europe.

Another position showing the graceful steps and attitudes in "The Pericon" dance.

By MAUDE MILLER

JUST when everybody thought he or she had mastered the one-step, the hesitation, maxixe and tango, along come several new dances which will keep us in dancing mood for another while and silence the cynic who predicted the death of the dancing craze.

Maurice and Florence Walton, who are originally responsible for the dance mania in America, and also have the distinction of having won Mary's enthusiastic approval of the tango, are showing a new dance—one of Maurice's inventions—called the "Pericon," plus a waltz classique and the one-step eccentrique—the three novelties of the season.

In her apartments Florence Walton talked to an AMERICAN representative of the new dances and dancing generally. "When Maurice introduced the one-step and tango four years ago, he prophesied then that the dancing craze would last five years, and here we are in our fourth year with interest still unabated and people generally showing more enthusiasm for the art.

"America people are most fickle," continued Miss Walton, "and as soon as they learn a dance they must have something new, something different to conquer. Realizing this, Maurice has continually created new steps and postures, until we include sixteen beautiful dances in our repertoire.

"Our latest, the pericon, is one of the easiest dances, combining, as it does, the waltz, schottische and the few Russian steps. The veriest amateur can master it in one lesson, and for ballroom dancing it far excels the tango.

"How is the pericon danced? Why, we start off with eight little running steps, then four taps of the heel, then four glide steps and then again to the running steps and break into a tango movement, all to a schottische music.

"The woman stands in front of her partner when starting the pericon, and it is very similar to other of my dances," said Maurice. "When I was commanded to dance before their Majesties the King and Queen of England, and knowing their avowed disapproval of the tango as then danced, I developed this pericon, which so pleased Queen Mary that she demanded an encore, and gave her approval of all of our dances."

"The tango has so many devotees, won't it be difficult to dethrone it for a newer, easier dance," was asked.

"I think it will be a welcome innovation," answered Miss Walton, "for in the tango, very few men relish the posturing that is necessary. Mind you, I do not mean that men can't dance it as well as the women, but few men are really as graceful as their women folk. Now—are they?

"The pericon is not a stage dance—it is primarily for the home. Maurice and I saw it danced first in a little town in Italy by six or eight people. It was not unlike our quadrille, as they danced it, but we both saw the possibilities of a very pretty and graceful dance in it, and Maurice got the music, which comes from South America, and worked out the dance we now call the pericon. If an amateur dancer wants to do something out of the ordinary, the pericon would certainly be a beautiful medium.

"There is really nothing new about any of the dances, for, you know, the one-step was developed from the turkey trot, and the fox trot is an improvement on the one-step, and since variety is what people want in their dances, we try to give it to them. As long as you can show people something new, something graceful, they will dance. Take the turkey trot, the one-step. People who never thought they could dance, easily learned that rollicky dance; the music had a swing—twas jolly, and it appealed to them. They soon graduated into the more difficult classes, and today the man or woman who doesn't dance some of the new dances is an exception, not the rule."

Maurice and Florence Walton have won an enviable reputation both here and abroad. Triumphs in Monte Carlo, Paris and London have left them a reputation that has stayed. Maurice has taught privately at the homes of Grand Duke Michael of Russia, the Duke's sister, Grand Duchess Anastasia of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Grand Duke Paul of Russia, Duke of Manchester and Mrs. John Astor.

"THE man you seek is dead!" said Turena, stepping in front of the crowd, his features surrendering to authority. "Now, go back to your work and leave his to ours."

"I understand, sir," said the sergeant. "We've no argument with you."

"Yes," agreed the maimed woman. "But you never leave this range alive so shall have one. So, you stay."

Looking at the bronze cross on the veteran's faded coat, the staff saluted, for the cross, though it were hung on rags wherever it was worn, entitled by custom to the salute of officers and "present arms" by sentries.

After Lanstron's announcement to the Brown staff of his decision not to cross the frontier, there was a restless movement in the chairs around the table, and the grimaces on most of the faces were those with which a practical man regards a Utopian proposal. The vice-chief was drumming on the table edge and looking at the nails in front of his fingers. If Lanstron resigned he himself would.

"Partow might have this dream before he won, but would he now?" asked the vice-chief. "No. He would go on!"

"Yes," said another officer. "The world will ridicule the suggestion; our people will overwhelm us with their anger. The Grays will take it for a sign of weakness."

"Not if we make the situation rightly to them," answered Lanstron. "Not if we go to them as brave adversary to brave adversary, in a fair spirit."

"We can—we shall take the range!" the vice-chief leapt on in a burst of rigid conviction when he saw that opinion was with him. "Nothing can stop this army now!" He struck the table edge with his fist, his shoulders stiffening.

"Please—please, don't!" implored Marta softly. "It sounds so like Wesenberg!"

OUTLINED MESSAGE.

The vice-chief seated as if he had received a sharp pin-prick. His shoulders unconsciously relaxed. He began a fresh study of a certain point on the table top. Lanstron, looking first at one and then at the other, spoke again, his words as measured as they ever had been in military discussion. The vice-chief had begun outlining his own message which would go with Partow's to the premier, to the nation, to every regiment of the Browns, to the Grays, to the world, a message of a certain fair dealing after the war in an officer's knew how to sink the plummet into human emotions. He reminded the vice-chief that there had been a providential answer to the call of "God with us!" provided the people of the lives that would be lost to no end but to engender hatred; he begged the army and the people not to break faith with that principle of "Not for Ourselves, but for ours," which had been their strength.

"I should like you all to sign it—to make it simply the old form of 'the staff has the honor to report,'" he said finally.

There was a hush as he finished—the hush of a deep impression when one man waits for another to speak. All were looking at him except the vice-chief, who was still staring at the table as if he had heard nothing. Then he stood up, his head in his mind. The man whose name was the symbol of victory to the soldiers who would be more than ever a hero as the news of his charge with the African Bravos traveled along the lines, would go on record to his soldiers as saying that they could not take the Gray range. This was a handicap that the vice-chief did not care to accept, and he knew how to turn a phrase as well as to make a soldierly decision. He looked up belligerently to Marta.

"I have decided that I had rather be a Westerling, Miss Gallind," he said. "Well make it unanimous. And you," he turned out to Lanstron—"you have said that Partow's five armies had their best day when they were the biggest team of our time. He has proved it by catching the spirit of our time and incarnating it."

Vaguely in the whirl of her joy, Marta heard the chorus of assent as the officers sprang to their feet in the station of being as one with their chief again. Lanstron caught her arms, fearing that she was going to fall, but a burning question rose in her mind to steady her.

"Then my shame—by sending men to slaughter—my sacrifice was not in vain?" she pleaded.

* * * * * * *

The sea of people packed in the great square of the Brown capital made a roar like the thunder of waves against a breakwater at night of a white spot on the background of gray stone, which was the head of an eminent statesman.

"It looks as if our government would last the week out," the premier chuckled as he turned to his colleagues at the cabinet table.

As yet only the brief bulletins whose publications in the newspapers had aroused the public to a frenzy had been received. The cabinet, as eager for details as the press, had remained up, awaiting a fuller official account.

"We have a long communication in preparation," the staff had telegraphed. "Meanwhile, the following is submitted:"

"SHEER MADNESS."

"Good heavens; It's not from the army! It's from the grave!" exclaimed the premier as he read the first paragraphs of Partow's message. "Of all the crowded dynamite ever! he gasped as he grasped the full meaning of the document, that piece of news, as staggering as the victory itself, that had lain in the staff vaults for years. "Well, we needn't give it out to the press; at least, not until after mature consideration," he declared when they had reached the end of Partow's appeal. "Now we well hear what the staff has to say for itself after gratifying the wish of a dead hero," he added as a messenger gave him another sheet.

The staff in loyalty to its dead leader made victory possible, and in loyalty to the principles of defence on which the army stands, begs to say to the nation—"

It was four o'clock in the morning when this dispatch concluded with "We heartily agree with the foregoing," and the cabinet read the names of all the general staff and the corps commanders.

"The thing is sheer madness!" he cried. "It's insubordination! 'Tis mere it suppressed.' The army must go on to gratify public demand. I'll show the staff that they are not in the saddle. They'll obey orders!"

He tried to get Lanstron on the long distance.

"Sorry, but the chief has retired," answered the officer on duty sleepily. "In fact, all the rest of the staff have, with orders that they are not to be disturbed before ten."

"Tell them that the premier, the head of the government, their commander, is speaking!"

"Yes, sir. The orders not to disturb them are quite positive, and as a junior I could not do so except by their orders as superiors. The chief, before retiring, however, repeated to me, in case any inquiry came from you, sir, that there was nothing he could add to the staff's message to the nation and the army. It is to be given to the soldiers the first thing in the morning, and he will let you know how they regard it."

"Confound these machine minds that spring their surprises as fully-executed plans!" exclaimed the premier.

"It's true—Partow and the staff have covered everything—met every argument. There is nothing more for them to say," said the foreign minister.

"But what about the indemnity?" demanded the finance minister. He was thinking of victory in the form of piles of gold in the treasury.

MUST HEAD PROCESSION.

This question, too, was answered.

"War has never brought prosperity," Partow had written. "It's purpose is to destroy, and destruction can never be construction. The conclusion of a war has often assured a period of peace; and peace gave the impetus of prosperity attributed to war. A man is strong in what he achieves, not through the gifts he receives or the goods he steals. Indemnity will not raise another blade of wheat in our land. To take it from a beaten man will foster in him the desire to beat his adversary in turn, and repay with the amount and more. Then we shall have the appreciation of our airways in the air, and soon another war and more destruction. Remove the danger of a European cataclysm, and we are diverted from the Grays becomes paltry beside the wealth that peace will create. An indemnity makes the purpose of the courage of the Grays in their assaults and of the Browns in their resistance that of the burglar and the looter. There is no money value in a human life when it is your own; and our soldiers have their lives. Do not cheapen their service."

HER HUSBAND'S WIDOW

A Thrilling Story of Romance, Adventure and Intrigue, in Which a Beautiful Young Bride Plays the Part of the Heroine.

SYNOPSIS.

Leslie Morne, a governess, falls in love with a British sergeant, who saves her from insult.

Gisele married Leslie, then goes to Egypt. She stays behind, and hears he has been killed. She conceals the fact that she is his widow and meets Oswald Varney, who takes her on a picnic with her class to his country place. She recognizes a painting on the wall as a portrait of James Morven, her mother's brother. Varney asks her to marry him, and she says she will.

CHAPTER VIII.

IT was mid-April, and the sun shone brightly upon ruinous, downfallen Jerusalem. Easter had gone and the great army of tourists were turning their steps homeward. In the slim, shady lounge of the big hotel near the Jaffa Gate, Mrs. Varney, half reclining in a long chair, fanned herself languidly. Opposite her sat a red-bearded Nonconformist minister and his wife, busily inscribing picture postcards. They had made it no secret that they had been treated to this holiday by the congregation—and the cheerful little wife had confessed to Mrs. Varney that she wished the congregation could have made it Switzerland or the Riviera.

Then there were the two old ladies from Monkchester—relics of a type almost extinct in England. They sat in a corner, holding each other's hands, looking scared and pitiful over what did they make of it all? Perhaps they derived some consolation from the neighborhood of Mr. Sawyer, a shy, silent elderly man, who lived in awe of his wife, but never seemed to feel quite safe out of her sight.

In two and a half years of married life Leslie had ripened into a woman of rare beauty. If at odd and infrequent moments you might have caught again something of the old wistfulness in her eyes, generally they smiled at you blithely enough. Her figure, though still slim, was softened and rounded into the curves of mature womanhood. Her cheeks were slightly fuller, and faintly bronzed by the ardent southern sun. But her forehead showed white beneath her hair, which was drawn down in to red waves over her ears and knotted low down behind—a style which set off admirably the long, flowing line of her neck. It was stuffy in the lounge, and she would have declined herself hot, but she looked pleasantly cool in the white muslin frock and sunhat affected by English women in the East.

LESLIE NOW A BEAUTIFUL WOMAN

Her personality had ripened also. The butterfly had burst from the chrysalis and warmed its wings in the sunlight. None of their fellow-travelers who envied Varney his beautiful wife or looked askance at her as the ideal, smart, pleasure-seeking society woman of today could have dreamt that four years before she was teaching little urchins their alphabet and living here at all on a salary of $15 a year.

She seemed typical of the class to which she now belonged. Her husband, who had never questioned her as to her parentage, had often marvelled secretly at the completeness of her naturalization into his own castle. Her uncle, Jim Morven, had striven in vain during sixteen years to acclimate himself to the world which he had entered by means of a golden key.

Women are, of course, adaptable, and a fashionable bookshop offers not a few opportunities for assimilating the ideas, the tastes, and the mannerisms of the bejarred classes, but blood may have had as much to do with it as Leslie herself believed. It gave her at any rate an immense fund of confidence.

She had had a very good time these two and a half years—a good time only interrupted by the ordeal and responsibilities of motherhood. She had missed none of the pleasures which wealth and station are so lavish of to the modern woman. She had enjoyed these years greedily, mindful of the lean years that had gone before.

She dropped her fan and opened her Tauchnitz novel. A shadow fell across the page. Her husband stood before her in a careless attitude, his hands thrust into his pockets.

A reformed rake is said to make a good husband. The Squire of Reeves had made up his mind to settle down, and his extremity of soul seemed likely to be manifold itself in his outward man.

"Well, he said, "here we are in Jerusalem. Don't think much of it myself now we've got the idea of yours, Leslie, coming here instead of going on to Egypt."

Mrs. Varney compressed her lips and bent over her book to hide the cloud on her face. "We're surely not going to have this all over again?" she said impatiently. "I told you I didn't want to go to Egypt when we started. I don't care for mummies or mosquitoes. Besides, you agreed that the heat would be insupportable at this time of year."

My husband sank into the chair beside her and groaned. "All right, my dear girl," he confessed humbly, "since you prefer this place we'd better have a look at the sights. Thank heaven we've only three days here. Where's the dragoman, Issa, or wha' ever he calls himself?"

"Here I am, sir." The dragoman stood bowing before them. "Been to fetch your letters, sir?" he said, handing a fairly bulky sheaf to Varney.

SHE WELCOMES NEWS OF HER LITTLE SON

Leslie snatched eagerly at an envelope with the postmark of her Kentish home, and the next moment had forgotten her surroundings in a minute account of the exciting experiences and astonishing development of her eight-months-old boy.

She had begun to re-read the nurse's letter when her attention was distracted by an exclamation from her husband. "Anything wrong?" she asked carelessly, since all was right with James Oswald nothing, she felt, could be seriously wrong.

"Poor old Wilfred is dead," he announced.

She was puzzled for a moment. "Your cousin in Canada?" she asked, to make sure she understood.

"Yes. This letter is from a lawyer at some uncarthly place"—he glanced again at the letter—"Moose Jaw!" It seems Wilfred broke his neck, buck-jumping or something of that kind, eight or nine months ago, and they have only just discovered his next-of-kin. That's me. His estate is valued at $15."

"It sounds very sad," remarked Leslie, not knowing exactly how much sympathy was expected of her.

Her husband lit a cigar. "I haven't seen Wilfred for over a dozen years," he informed her. "Cleared once, two years ago, when he came to London for a 'bust,' as he frankly explained. He was 'bust' himself at the end of a week, and I shipped him back to Canada with the belief that one might experience in getting rid of a pithiocrex which one happened to be encumbered with. He was only a third cousin, as I believe I once explained to you.

"On the whole he was my most respectable relative," Oswald Varney smiled grimly. He looked down at his cigar. "A year ago," he continued, "His death would have worried me a good deal. Before the boy came he was my heir, you see. Now he's dead, that waster, Gayfston, is next in succession after Alwes."

Leslie noted the deep shadow of annoyance on her husband's face. "Who was Gayfston?" she inquired wonderingly.

"Sir Ralph Gayeston, my dear, is as far as I know, my only surviving relative. If I never mentioned him to you before it's because I'm ashamed of him. He is the last descendant of the elder branch. He is a bounder—and a bad hat. He must be"—Varney made a mental calculation "between fifty and fifty-five by now. I haven't seen him for seven or eight years. I dare say I shall hear from him now."

"You seem rather down on him," observed Leslie, conscious of a very languid interest in this wicked person.

"Not without cause. He's a rank outsider. If his famous ancestor was anything like him, then the history books have been all too lenient. I'm not condemning him for his escapades when he was a youngster, though I have heard some ugly tales"—Varney checked himself and proceeded. "But I do object to a man trading on his position and lending his name and prestige to every swindler who will offer him a few guineas for the use of them. Well, you needn't go into mourning for Wilfred—at least not out here."

Varney rose and stretched the letters into his pocket. The dragoman was growing restive. "This morning, sir, we visit the Haram, the Temple of Solomon," he announced. "If you please, we start at once. I have the permits. Here are Mr. and Miss Durgan—they come also."

The Durgans were a couple of Americans, father and daughter, with whom the Varneys had made agreeable friends on the ship. In old Durgan, a self-made millionaire of Irish extraction, Leslie fancied she saw a general resemblance of manner and type to her uncle Jim. "Freckle" Durgan was the typical American girl, pretty, sallow, high of cheekbone, tremendously well informed, vivacious and daring.

After an exchange of greetings the party set forth.

REPORTS FROM THE POLITICAL BATTLELINE

Samuel W. McCall sees the ablest of the Progressive leaders are returning to the Republican party, and Charles Sumner Bird talks over with him, but it looks like a lot of fuss to make just over Norman White.

* * *

Or has Mr. McCall inside information as to Mr. Roosevelt's 1916 intentions.

* * *

Congressman Mitchell of the Thirteenth is a man with a seeing eye. He was one of the first of our national legislators to perceive the possibilities of South American trade, and he studied the situation and is helping business men of his district plan to snatch the opportunities the war offers.

* * *

It is pretty generally understood that considerable money is being used in an effort to defeat Mitchell. Which, as an investment, is in a class with the purchase of Bunker Hill monument from a street corner peddler for a tombstone.

* * *

Republican leaders are complaining that the indifferent voter is more numerous this year than ever before. The Democratic candidates have failed to discover any of this indifference, however.

* * *

Every citizen of Boston will this week receive by mail a circular explaining why he should vote against the proposed change in the City Charter. It looks as if the post-office business was booming under Billy Murray.

* * *

Grafton Cushing, who earnestly desires to be Lieutenant-Governor, and says he never did think much of that speakership, anyhow, has issued a "Lest-we-Forget" circular telling about what he did for the sick soldiers at Montauk Point as long ago as 1898.

* * *

But the circular says nothing about the meritorious measures secretly assassinated in the Great and General Court under Mr. Cushing's direction in the last two or three years.

* * *

This "indifferent voter" business doesn't go for Democratic headquarters, the largest number in the town's history, are registered.

* * *

Peter W. Collins is the Democratic nominee for Congress, and the city of Somerville and Chelsea and thereabouts could look farther and fare worse.

* * *

In some of the western States, notably Ohio, prohibition will be the determining factor in the campaign. There are some who believe the liquor question will have more weight in Massachusetts than is generally expected. Half the voters of the State, it is said, are "dry" by conviction.

Hearing some talk about a new town government over in Norwood and about a city charter fight in Boston, the good people of Weymouth have jumped into the Jamboree. They meet tonight to talk over this commission government business.

PROTEST BLOCKING UP OF DEWEY SQUARE

A hundred and twenty-five thousand men and women and children go in and out of the South Station daily. A hundred and twenty-five thousand people have been seriously discommoded by the unnecessary litter which has accompanied the work of subway construction in Dewey square. And a hundred and twenty-five thousand people are beginning to ask:

"Cannot something be done about it?"

The situation in Dewey square is distinctly serious, in the opinion of commuters who have to pick their way around sand piles and concrete troughs, and dodge engines, and dumping teams, and lumber piles and yawning excavations to get to and from their trains.

CONDITIONS ARE BAD.

During the recent rains the square was inches deep in muddy water at many spots and everywhere the cobbles were smeared and scattered with half an inch or so of sticky clay.

Conditions, because of the great numbers of people who pass through the square daily, are even worse than they were on Dorchester avenue when the Nawn Construction Company and the Transit Commission were putting in the Boylston street subway.

Merchants and business men along Boylston street then protested to the Transit Commission. They held the Transit Commission responsible, for a word from the Commission would force the Nawn Construction Company to restrict their surface litter to reasonably limits.

Similar protests are now being voiced by commuters and others inconvenienced by the condition of Dewey square. They say much of the disturbance is unnecessary, and that sufficient work would lessen the inconvenience to pedestrians.

The Transit Commission holds out hope with the promise that work in the square will be finished by the end of December. But commuters reply:

"How about the snow? Heavy snows often render the square almost impassable even when it is in normal condition. Now affairs will be so much the worse. And we're sure to have snow before December 31."

LETTER IN STREET.

The two great arteries of traffic leading to and from Dewey square through Dewey square to the South Station are Federal and Summer streets. No matter which route the downtown pedestrian takes, bound to reach his train, he must run the gauntlet of dump wagons, derricks and dirt.

If he goes down Summer street, he is swooped upon many times by the south side of Summer street, as he enters the square, he finds hoisting engines in place, encroaching on the square itself and cutting off half the roadway on the west side of the "island."

When he has picked his way past these and reached the "island," he finds that the Nawn Construction shanty and the stacked lumber and supplies —and of course, though, he finds aboard fence—seriously encroach upon the sidewalk. At rush hours pedestrians must fairly creep past, so great is the crush. A pile of sand further along on the shanty takes up almost half the sidewalk.

Where Federal street runs under the Elevated tracks to cross, and it is littered with dirt, clay and sand, from the trains. And at the broad entrance to the station, the north side of the entrance is almost blocked by excavations, planking and standing apparatus.

From Federal street the pedestrian must cross to Summer and run the same gauntlet.

Tragic Life Story of Mildred Sullivan

CHAPTER XI.

It was an embarrassing ordeal for Dr. Dudley on his return to his native hearth, handcuffed, and he showed in various ways that he felt the situation keenly.

The homecoming of the young physician and his three girl prisoners seemed more like the return of a wedding party, however, so far as the scene at the little railroad station at New Limerick was concerned.

A crowd of curious men, women and children had greeted every train from Boston. The depot for days, expecting the return of the captives from Boston. To avoid a crush the authorities planned a cough. They dropped off the train seven or eight miles below Houlton. Only a few newspapermen, the local policemen and pickers were on hand there.

Two touring cars then hauled up at the way station to meet them. The prisoners and their guards had a siltpop the previous day. They had taken the wrong train from Boston. It did not make through connections, so they had to stay in Bangor over night. The prisoners were locked up.

Dr. Dudley got in the same machine as Alice Pelletier. Miss Michaud and Ettta Pelletier were in the machine ahead. Alice Pelletier fenced her face with a magazine to avoid being photographed and held the shield around her ears most of the way to Houlton.

At the red brick jail behind the Houlton courthouse a large crowd was gathered, the news having spread in some mysterious way, possibly from the train from New Limerick, although the greatest secrecy had been exercised by the officials regarding the hour of the arrival.

Big Crowd Sees Accused Arrive.

Many in the crowd were high school boys and girls. They made a mad scramble when the accused stepped smartly along the concrete walk. Almost elbowed and Dudley and the girls shielded their faces with uplifted arms and newspapers.

That soon Dr. Dudley was permitted to talk to the girls with his two relatives, unguarded, and he regained his old cheerfulness and spirit. He talked football and of the Braves' chances. Dr. Dudley is an all-round athlete and a lover of outdoor sports of every kind. He was considered one of the best quarterbacks that ever played at Colby and he is in the pink of condition today. He is an enthusiastic hunter, a lover of horses, was formerly the first automobile over the roads at high speed.

His noon meal with his relatives was the first relaxation and hour of real liberty he had enjoyed from the time the fugitive had been apprehended for the statutory complaints in Boston. After the meal Deputy Sheriff Lawlin arrived over the Houlton road and walked behind Dr. Dudley and his relatives to the jail, and they had pledged the safe return of the unguarded prisoner to the jail door.

Meanwhile the Pelletier sister and Miss Michaud were in the jail fare. Ettta was in unstrung to eat much. The predicament affected her more than any of the others, from the start, and the public showed greater sympathy for her.

Another dodge was played on crimon when court held an inquest on the body of Mildred Sullivan. Let me interest you in the Sullivan's desk as a court bench, and the accused were admitted to bail.

Dr. Dudley and Miss Michaud were charged with being principals and the Pelletier sisters were charged with having been accessories after the fact. All were admitted to bail. Miss Michaud and Dr. Dudley were each bailed in sums of $1,000, and the Pelletier sisters were each held in $1,000 bonds.

The same relatives who furnished bonds for Dr. Dudley furnished bonds for Etta and Alice Pelletier, and this fact was freely commented on. Miss Michaud had to hunt up relatives to go her bonds, but did not bother to bail Miss Michaud started the reported breach between him and Miss Michaud. That there was a coolness was shown at the trial and counsels appeared in court the following Tuesday—October 6—for what was expected to be a hearing.

Three are Held for Grand Jury.

Miss Michaud never looked once in the direction of Dr. Dudley or the Pelletier sisters, who sat together at the other side of the courtroom, while she sat within the bar inclosure. Miss Michaud, who had her own lawyer. In passing out she brushed past the other defendants, but did not speak. Her attitude started forward, hugging and was the first hint that she might later help the girls, as intimated from official sources.

The threatened hearing had brought a large crowd and filled the balcony with so many girls and women that the courtroom resembled a hive and was assembled for private theatricals. There was a great deal of whispering and suppressed whispering upstairs, where spectators were their Sunday best.

Etta Pelletier was speechless with gratitude when Attorney Archibald asked that she be discharged, as he felt that he did not have enough evidence to warrant binding her over for the grand jury.

Judge Carroll, in kindly voice, told the youngest of the defendants that she was free to go and she nodded her head in thanks and was embraced by her second mother and relatives in the body.

The others waived examination. This was unlooked for. There had been a notification of the arrangement on Thursday, on the part of counsel for the defence, that a full hearing would be demanded to learn the prosecution's hand. But Attorney E. Ross Shaw, counsel for D. N. Dudley, explained to the court that he had planned on a hearing, it was found to be impracticable owing to the fact counsel for the defendants had not had sufficient time to prepare their case and marshal the proper witnesses.

So Dr. Dudley and Alice Pelletier and Miss Michaud were bound over in the same bail for the Aroostook County grand jury which will convene at Houlton on November 17. And great was the sensation in the courtroom gallery.

BIG PROTEST ON DRISCOLL CASE TONIGHT

Final arrangements were completed today for the great mass meeting of South Boston citizens tonight to protest against the retirement from the police of Katherine Driscoll, the little, lame South Boston girl whose arrest on a charge of "loitering" has stirred up widespread indignation.

The meeting is to be held in Maynard Hall, corner of D and Silver streets, just off Broadway, South Boston. It is expected that the police will be overflowed. Indignation is drawn up expressing the feelings of the community and demanding police changes in the district.

The Driscoll girl, who is seventeen, will appear at her own story of the arrest. She will be accompanied by her father and brother and many of their Tudor street neighbors, a number of them women, who will speak their feelings. The deputies will include some of the best known men in the peninsular section.

WOMEN TO ATTEND.

Women are invited to attend as well as men. To former Representative James J. Twohig, who arranged the meeting, have come numerous letters from women residents, assuring him that delegations of citizens will be present from outside South Boston.

Former Representative Twohig stated today that he hoped that as many women neighbors present "unless they were frightened off by the police." Twohig managed several halls, only to be told later that the managers were afraid to bring out of the bargain. Finally, Mayor Curley, without taking sides, helped in securing Maynard Hall so that both sides of the case might be given to the public.

What interest is general in the district that the police are too quick to arrest boys and girls, while worse offenders, it is claimed, are simply "invited" to come around to the court.

Katherine Driscoll lives at No. 8 Tudor street, and she takes care of her two sisters, Sarah and brother. She was fined $5 in court and appealed. Her father is planning to prosecute the police for defamation of his daughter's character.

GIRL'S OWN STORY.

She says the police advised her to plead guilty, and that they put her in a cell two hours before she was bailed.

"I was doing no harm," she declared. "I had only just gone out on the street. Patrolman Eldredge came along. Next morning he took me aside from the police station. I was terribly frightened. He wanted to take me in a patrol, but my family protested.

"He advised me to plead guilty and said everything would be all right. He told me I had better say I was standing on the sidewalk too long. I was standing on a wide walk on the street, where can we go?"

Those invited tonight will be, besides Mr. Twohig, Representative John J. Murphy, Representative William H. Ryan, Representative Joseph W. J. Sullivan, Representative Nominees Joseph H. Wilson, William J. Foley, David J. Casey and Edward Morriss.

FOOD SOURING IN STOMACH CAUSES INDIGESTION, GAS

"Pape's Diapepsin" ends all stomach distress in five minutes.

Wonder what upset your stomach—which portion of the food did the damage—do you? Well, don't bother. If your stomach is sour, it revolt, if sour, nasty and upset, and what you just ate has fermented into stubborn lumps, is full dizzy and aches, belch gases and acids and eructate undigested food; breath foul, tongue coated—just take a little Pape's Diapepsin, and in five minutes you won't know that there ever was a case of indigestion and distress.

Millions of men and women today know that it is needless to have a sick stomach. A large case, a few cents, a full dizzy, foul truly wonderful—it digests food and gives relief in five hours—and is the only thing that is really going to help you, or the only thing that don't go on and on with a weak, disordered stomach. Diapepsin is necessary.—ADVERTISEMENT.

Mrs. Lawrence to Speak in Boston

Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, the English suffragette, who arrived today in New York for a lecture tour of the United States, is to speak under the auspices of the Boston Equal Suffrage Association at the first session of six Sunday theatre meetings, at the Tremont Theatre, November 8, at 3 o'clock. The meeting will be introduced by Mayor Curley.

Acute Articular Rheumatism

Relieved By Anti-Kamnia Tablets

The exact cause of rheumatism is unknown, though it is generally believed to be due to an excess of uric acid in the blood. It may be also and with equal truth that no remedy has been found which is a specific for rheumatism. In fact literature dealing on rheumatism shows that nearly all the drugs known to man have been given a trial. To the hands of the sufferer, however, many drugs have been used with the result that almost every sufferer has found the same remedy to be a source of disappointment. Many physicians, however, agree that every kind of treatment is aided by the administration of some remedy to purify the blood and quiet the nerves, and Dr. W. S. Schultze advocates the opinion of thousands of practitioners when he says that Anti-Kamnia Tablets should be given the preference over all other remedies. These tablets are a combination of the best known remedies in headaches, neuralgia and all pains.

BOSTON AMERICAN
33 AND 35 SUMMER ST., BOSTON, OCT. 26, 1914.

The AMERICAN Hopes the Governor Won't Complain if It Borrows One of His Speeches to Use as an Editorial

The speeches of Governor Walsh often make good editorials for the AMERICAN.

He addressed the citizens of Winchester last Tuesday on the subject of the initiative and referendum. This great reform is one of the principles of both the Democratic and Progressive parties. Governor Walsh's utterance on this most important of all reforms represents the opinion of more than two-thirds of the voters of Massachusetts expressed at the last election by the vote for the Democratic and Progressive parties, both of which declared for the initiative and referendum.

The Governor said:

"I believe there is no question before the people of this Commonwealth more entitled to a place of paramount importance than the establishment of the initiative and referendum, otherwise known as direct legislation.

"The initiative and referendum have been amply tested and they have proved thoroughly practical and effective. They are the most sweeping measures immediately obtainable according to the most advanced thinkers in the political world for the destruction of corrupt ring rule and corporate domination—supreme perils of the life of the government.

"The initiative and referendum is more powerful than any anti-lobby legislation. It is destructive of more of the evils that exist in government today than any other reform.

"No State that has adopted direct legislation has ever seriously agitated a return to former conditions. It is a power which once gained the people will never surrender.

"In this campaign let us look at the candidates pledged to this reform. The Republican party platform is opposed to this principle. In the Legislature the attitude of the political parties of Massachusetts on this important question can in no better way determine this than by recalling the vote in the Massachusetts House of Representatives on this present year."

The initiative and referendum originated in Switzerland, where a combination between the liquor interests and the railroads had made that republic the most corrupt government in the world. It controlled absolutely the Legislatures both of the Cantons, which represent our States, and of the Federal government. The people vainly struggled to reform their government through their representatives. At last, in desperation, they took the legislation over into their own hands by means of a political process called the initiative and referendum.

The result of this reform upon the morals of Swiss politics was immediate and miraculous. Today Switzerland is recognized to have the purest government in the world.

The citizens of Massachusetts ought to learn what is the attitude of their candidates for the Legislature on this great question.

It stands in the line of the inevitable march of events towards a brighter and a better day in our public affairs. Those who oppose will be overwhelmed like those who opposed the free public schools, compulsory education, manhood suffrage, the introduction of the labor-saving machine, and a thousand other devices of progress, political, industrial, economic and social.

Would Anybody Miss You—

If So, How Much and How Long? An Interesting Question

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company

They say that sleepless men can overcome insomnia by counting imaginary sheep jumping over a fence.

Other sleepless men might go to sleep trying to count up how many people would miss them if they should suddenly disappear.

Did you ever ask yourself the question at the top of this editorial?

You have heard about the very rich man who carried heavy life insurance without apparent necessity. He said he wanted to be sure that SOMEBODY would be sorry when he died—if only the insurance companies.

You can make up your mind how much you amount to as a private individual, a worker, a citizen, if you can also make up your mind WHO would miss you, how many, how much and for how long.

You are working somewhere for a living and you probably think that you are not valued at your actual worth.

How much would you be missed if you left? How long would you be remembered? What difference would it make to the concern that employs you?

How much trouble would there be in getting another man as good or better?

You think that you have friends. Would THEY miss you? How much and how long?

How many years after your death will your name be mentioned? One year? That is a long time for the average.

We all take ourselves seriously. Nature kindly attends to that in order to keep us working here—making us value our little lives and struggle to keep them going.

But out of tens of millions there are few whose going would make any difference, few that would be remembered or that ought to be remembered.

How much difference would it make if you went? And how can you spend the rest of your life so that when the time comes for you to get out and give your place to another your going may really be worth talking about, and you a little atom worth remembering after you are gone?

Next to doing your duty every day, and asking yourself whether you have done it, there is only one really important question, and that is, "What do I amount to, and what difference will it make if I vanish?"

Do Not Be a 'Sob-Brother'

A Womanly Woman: What Can Be More Charming on Earth, and What More Admirable Than a Manly Man? We Can Be What We Will to Be

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1914, by Star Company.

THE writer of this article received some time ago a letter from a young man who complained that he had become despondent and unhappy through reading "Burning Daylight," by Jack London. He asked for some mental tonic to assist him in getting back to a normal state of mind.

Knowing Jack London to be the most optimistic and charming of men personally, and a delight to all his friends, the letter was forwarded with the suggestion that he write the young man a cheerful word and shake him out of his despondent mood.

This brought the following reply from Mr. London:

"The unfortunate young man whose letter you forwarded is a weak brother; he is a sob-brother. He is hysterical. If he lives to be a hundred he will spend his existence leaning on the breast or chest of his stronger sisters and brothers. Neither you nor I nor God himself can help the sob-brothers and sisters, because they do not help themselves."

"Ruined by Ridicule"

Mr. London has coined a new term which is very expressive, and which describes a large class of human beings.

Here is another letter from another sob-brother.

This young man of thirty says his whole life is ruined by the ridicule of his associates, because he happens to have a fair complexion and handome features, instead of a rugged appearance.

His associates refuse to treat him with respect, and his business is injured.

Then he adds:

"I have now such a hatred for human nature that I do not seek the companionship of man or woman. I hate any one to speak to me, because I would not trust any one. I had the misfortune of being born poor. I suppose if I did not have to work for my living I could be more independent. Things have come to such a state of affairs I can just barely make a living, as it seems there is little prospects ahead of me."

Surely we have here another sob-brother.

If the young man will analyze his mental condition he will find weakness and self-consciousness and a self-centred tendency, and he will understand why he has become the target of the jests of the thoughtless.

The man who has ambition, courage, hope, will power and big ideals can never be put down or pushed aside by others merely because he has pink cheeks or a Greek nose.

The best thing this sob-brother can do is to enter into training as an athlete. Let him take a course of lessons with the gloves and then reply to ridicule by a challenge to a boxing match.

Courage and Strength

After a few such experiments he will find the attitude of his acquaintances changing from ridicule to respect.

It is unfortunate for a man to look like a woman, and equally unfortunate for a woman to look masculine.

The woman who is afflicted with such an appearance should cultivate all the feminine graces with more earnestness even than her normal appearing sisters; and the feminine-faced man should bend all his energies toward the aim of being in every respect manly.

A womanly woman; what can be more charming on earth, and what more admirable than a manly man?

To whichever sex you belong, cultivate the qualities which belong to it.

And of all things, avoid being a sob-brother or sob-sister.

Look in your own mind and soul for the courage and strength which lie there; look up to the Great Source from which you came, and be and do that which you desire.

We can be what we will to be.

Old Superstition Connecting Comets and War Still Alive

There Is a Brightening Comet Now Visible in the North Which Superstitious Persons Associate with the Horror in Europe—What Science Says of Comets

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE ancient superstition about a connection between comets and war is still alive, and has lived itself now upon the new comet visible in the northern sky, and known from the name of its discoverer as Deievan's comet.

Even in these enlightened times there are, apparently, not a few persons who are half inclined to look upon this comet—as it would have been universally regarded a few hundred years ago—as being a celestial portent, prophetic of the great war now raging.

Comets are so stealthy in their approach, so surprising in their first appearances, so mysterious in some of their movements, and so amazing and unparalleled in their aspects when they attain to the rank, that there is some excuse for the vague fear which they awaken in uninstructed minds.

Deievan's comet, at present, is not a very conspicuous object to the naked eye, but it is growing brighter, and it may possibly become a wonder-stirring phenomenon before it has run its course. In a photograph of it made by Mr. William Henry of Brooklyn, it shows a very remarkable tail, spread out in a broad fan of pale light, with a brighter rim along its advancing edge. This tail can already be seen with the naked eye, and is striking as viewed with a field-glass.

The position of the comet in the sky is not favorable to its general visibility, and if it were better placed it would unquestionably be the object of universal attention. Its path lies under the "Great Dipper," which at this time of year is seen, in the evening, low down in the northwest. It is moving eastward, or in a westerly direction, from the bowl toward the handle of the "Dipper," but it is so near the horizon that it must be looked for as soon as the sky becomes dark after sunset. Later it sinks lower, and the smoke and mist tend to obscure it.

It will be much brighter than it is now, and will, near the end of the month, pass near the splendid star Arcturus. How brilliant it will be at that time it is impossible to say, because comets are very eccentric in their development when drawing near to the sun. If it should become as bright as the great comet of Donati, which pursued a similar course, and actually passed over Arcturus in October, 1858, it will certainly draw the eyes of the whole world upon itself, and we shall hear a great deal more about its imagined significance as a sign of disaster to mankind.

All that the astronomer knows about comets is that they are subject to the force of gravitation, which is the cause of their approach to and subsequent recession from the sun; that they are composed of substances containing carbon, iron and a few other chemical elements known upon the earth; that the radiation of the sun affects them, as they draw near to it, in such a way as to cause the outgushing of gaseous or vaporous matter which streams out, mostly behind the comet, in the form of a luminous trail, or tail; that the paths, or orbits, which they follow in obedience to the sun's attraction are either elliptical, parabolic or hyperbolic curves; that some of them never get entirely away from the sun's influence after once having entered the Solar System, but continue to travel around the sun in elongated orbits; and that nearly all the largest comets either do get away (going, perhaps, to visit other suns), or else follow curves stretching so far into other space that hundreds of years must elapse between their successive appearances in our neighborhood.

It hardly needs to be said that astronomical investigation finds nothing whatever in the nature or movements of comets to justify the superstitions that have, in all ages, been entertained concerning them. The only conceivable ways in which they could affect the earth would be by coming into collision with it, or by falling into the sun.

Bring Back the Flag

By WEX JONES

BRING back the flag to the seas of the world—
Bring back the flag that too long has been furled.
Bring back the flag of the Essex and Ranger,
Flaming its way through adventure and danger.
Bring back the flag that has gleamed at the Pole,
First of the age-old adventurers' goal.
Let hair-splitting lawyers and white-livers nag;
Up and be doing; bring back the flag!

Bring back the flag that the clipper ships flew,
Outfooting the trade winds, however they blew.
[Where is the breed of the skippers who sailed them,
And the race of the sea-dogs who never had failed them?
Are they gone, like the flag, from the face of the seas
Where alien ensigns now whip to the breeze?]
Up and be doing; 'tis no time to lag—
Bring back the flag! Bring back the flag!

DO YOU KNOW THAT—

BENEATH GRAY SKIES

By LILIAN LAUFERTY

BENEATH gray skies the chill world sleeps,
My heart with brooding heaven weeps
While lengthened night to morning creeps
Beneath gray skies.

But when I made life's journey thru
A dawn tinged world of gold and dew,
I still plucked rosemary and rue!

So now when gray morn follows night,
Within my heart I kindle light,
And turn to find my world is bright—
Beneath gray skies.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

HELP THE SOUTH

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN.

Dear Sir—"Buy a Bale of Cotton" is all right, but everyone cannot buy a whole bale and would not know what to do with it if they did.

Suppose every one buy all the cotton goods, hosiery, underwear, etc., that he can use during the next year or two. It will not only help the cotton growers out of their real predicament, but will stimulate manufacturers and mercantile lines as well, giving profitable employment to thousands, who in turn become buyers of all sorts of merchandise, cotton and otherwise.

By the time the benefit of this course has spent itself the war will be over and we will have a foreign market for our surplus products.

THE NEW HAVEN CASE

Editor Boston AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—I fail to understand why the government has been so slow in prosecuting the New Haven crooks. As I understand it, it is in possession of a great deal of evidence against them and has already filed suit. I am a small stockholder in this railroad and have suffered loss thereby, so naturally I am interested. But I should think all citizens would be interested in so great a robbery as this, and it seems to me that it is the business of the government to make an example of the men responsible.

A NEUTRAL'S NOTION

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—I notice the German cruiser Emden has sunk ten ships in various quarters of the globe. What a pity the United States has no merchant ships to take their places, as the British had ships to take the places of those destroyed by the Alabama in 1861-64. As a good neutral I add that it is a pity we have none to take the place of the German ships tied up at Boston. Can't the administration see the opportunity for re-establishing our merchant marine that is slipping away? A. S. D.
